The stereotypes about the Patriots' two best players were oh-so-true on Sunday in New Orleans. Tom Brady looked like the G.O.A.T., throwing for over 400 yards and three touchdowns without an interception in the Pats' relatively easy victory in New Orleans. Rob Gronkowski looked great when healthy, but his injury-prone rep also reared its ugly head. Gronk went down late in the game with what the Patriots initially called a groin injury. For more on Brady and Gronk, see Metro.us.

UN HAS EXHAUSTED OPTIONS ON N. KOREA

U.S. Ambassador to the United Nations Nikki Haley said the U.N. Security Council has run out of options on containing North Korea's nuclear program and the United States may have to turn the matter over to the Pentagon. "We have pretty much exhausted all the things that we can do at the Security Council at this point," Haley told CNN's "State of the Union," adding that she was perfectly happy to hand the North Korea problem over to Defense Secretary James Mattis. As world leaders head to the United Nations headquarters in New York for the annual General Assembly meeting this week, Haley's comments indicated the United States was not backing down from its threat of military action against North Korea. North Korea launched a missile over Japan into the Pacific Ocean on Thursday in defiance of new U.N. Security Council sanctions.

HURRICANE JOSE STAYING OFF EAST COAST

2 Hurricane Jose is expected to pass east of the North Carolina coast on Monday and remain off the U.S. East Coast from Virginia to New England, while Tropical Storm Maria formed and is forecast to become a hurricane early next week, the U.S. National Hurricane Center said. Maria could threaten several Caribbean islands, some of which were devastated by Hurricane Irma less than two weeks ago. It is expected to approach the Leeward Islands on Monday and become a hurricane around that time, the NHC said. A hurricane watch is in effect for Antigua, Barbuda, St. Kitts, Nevis and Montserrat and France has also issued a hurricane watch for the island of Guadeloupe. A hurricane watch is typically issued 48 hours before the first occurrence of storm-force winds, NHC said.

PATRIOTS WIN

3 Patriots quarterback Tom Brady throws a pass against the New Orleans Saints at the Mercedes-Benz Superdome on Sunday in New Orleans, Louisiana. The Patriots won the game, 36-20.

US TOURISTS ATTACKED WITH ACID IN FRANCE

4 A woman threw acid at four female American tourists at a train station in the French city of Marseille on Sunday, an attack police said they did not believe was terrorism-related. Two of the women, in their early 20s, were treated in the hospital for burns to their faces, police said. The tourists were on their way from the southern city to Paris. The attacker, a woman in her 40s, was arrested at the scene. Investigators have for now ruled out a terrorist motive and said they believe the attacker may be mentally disturbed, a police official said.

GLOBAL DEBT MAY BE OFF BY $13 TRILLION

5 Global debt may be underreported by around $13 trillion because traditional accounting practices exclude foreign exchange derivatives used to hedge international trade and foreign currency bonds, the BIS said on Sunday. Bank for International Settlements researchers said it was hard to assess the risk this "missing" debt poses, but that the main worry was a liquidity crunch like the one that seized FX swap and forwards markets during the financial crisis. The $13 trillion unaccounted-for exposure exceeds the on-balance-sheet debt of $10.7 trillion that data shows was owed by firms and governments outside the United States at end-March. The fact these FX derivatives do not appear on financial and non-financial institutions' balance sheets under current accounting rules means little is known about where the debt lies.

The marijuana industry is exploring ways to curate users' experiences. GETTY IMAGES

Terpenes are the newest frontier of curated cannabis experience, experts claim

Those in the marijuana industry add flavors, aromas and effects to weed with the help of terpenes.

KRISTIN TOUSSAINT
@kristindakota
kristin.toussaint@metro.us

For the marijuana novice, weed is just weed. But for the cannabis con-noisseur, there's a whole world of flavors, scents and effects — and it goes beyond just different types of strains.

The next frontier of curating a cannabis experience, experts say, lies not in a strain of the plant — the Sour Diesels and Pineapple Kushes that your dispensary will surely have on its menu — but in harnessing the terpenes within cannabis.

"Terpenes are essential oils found in different botanicals and plant matter. They're why lemon has that citrusy smell, why pine needles smell like pine," said Seth Yaffe, operations manager at Ermont Inc., a nonprofit medical marijuana dispensary in Quincy, Mass.

Terpenes are mostly known for giving plants their unique aroma, which is why there are essential oils of lavender and eucalyptus. But when they work in conjunction with cannabinoids like THC and CBD, "it's an entourage effect," Yaffe said, meaning terpenes can actually change or heighten the therapeutic effects of marijuana.

To take advantage of terpenes, many labs isolate them when they process the cannabis into a concentrate.

"Most people processing for THC strip out the terpenes and other minor cannabinoids to get to a clear product," explained Norman Olson of High Tech Extracts in Maine. "Then to get flavor and aroma, you add the terpenes back. That's the sommelier art of it."

Speaking of wine, Yaffe actually worked in the restaurant industry for 25 years, where he wrote wine lists. He's seen how people can smell a certain strain and know right away what it is, "just like a sommelier would be able to blind-smell wine."

But with terpenes, his role goes above and beyond suggesting flavors and scents someone might like. It's about the kind of high these terpenes bring with them, too.

"It might be the same level of cannabis, but by adding in different blends of terpenes, we're able to promote specific effects ... like promoting more relaxing sleep," Yaffe said. "The four major effects of the line we carry are concentration, helping sleep, anti-anxiety and the ability to have more energy."

This is the customization that is taking over the business side of cannabis, Yaffe said. People aren't necessarily looking just for certain strains anymore, but for a curated high, and terpenes help achieve that.

Still, terpenes are "new to the game" in terms of what we know, Yaffe said. Though there hasn't been a lot of scientific research around cannabis and all its components yet, experts in the industry hope that with its acceptance — like the legalization in Massachusetts — comes more knowledge about it.

"Regardless of medical or recreational, a tremendous amount of people are cannabis users that are really looking for an effect," he said. "It's the importance of those terpenes and how we understand them, how we move forward with science to be able to manipulate and safely add them, that will allow for the creation of new products."

TRUMP'S AMERICA

SECRETARY OF 'CAN I HAVE YOUR JOB NOW?'

Expect the president to send a signal on Ambassador Nikki Haley's future when he takes a break from his juvenile GIFs.

World leaders are descending on the United Nations this week, and you know what that means: Manhattan traffic will be even more nightmarish than usual. Restaurant reservations will be impossible in Midtown — except at 5:15 or 11:30 p.m.

And U.N. Ambassador Nikki Haley will show everyone that her brief internship is over and she's more than ready to be secretary of state. Rex Tillerson may have the title. But Haley definitely has the elbows, and she seems to have the juice with Donald Trump.

The only lingering question: Which man will get sick of the other sooner, Tillerson or Trump?

Expect the president to send a signal on Haley's future just as soon as he takes a break from his juvenile GIFs. His latest retweet comes via Mike @fuctupmind: "Donald Trump's amazing golf swing" smacks a ball into #CrookedHillary Clinton and knocks her to the ground. Yes, instead of preparing for his first speech to the 193 member nations of the General Assembly on Tuesday, the president of the United States spent the weekend sharing a violent video about a former rival, which he seemed to find hilarious. Haley is the former governor of South Carolina. She is also one of the most ambitious members of Trump's administration. She was interviewed by him for the secretary of state job but told Trump she didn't think she had enough experience. The U.N. gig would be her foreign-policy internship.

That left secretary of state to Tillerson, the retired chairman of Exxon Mobile, who has spent his time at Foggy Bottom hardly doing the job at all.

Proposing devastating State Department budget cuts. Leaving key positions unfilled. Pursuing a vision of U.S. power abroad that can easily be summed up in two words: "orderly shutdown." He's also failed to bond with Donald Trump.

That last one's a killer.

Asked on Sunday whether she's now ready to fill Tillerson's shoes, Haley gave the political answer. "Secretary Tillerson continues to work hard," she told Dana Bash on CNN. "He's not going anywhere. I continue to work well with him."

But really, how long is an internship supposed to last?

Photos from the 2017 Boston Freedom Rally

The 28th annual Freedom Rally brought thousands of marijuana enthusiasts to Boston Common for a three-day celebration.

AMY RUSSO
@MetroBoston
letters@metro.us

Thousands flooded Boston Common for a three-day marijuana festival, avoiding a cop crackdown while lighting up.

The Freedom Rally attracts massive crowds annually to the city, where attendees are permitted to buy bongs, smoke cannabis and enjoy live music on two stages. This year marks the 28th celebration.

While public pot use remains illegal in some cases in Massachusetts, the state decriminalized the possession and use of up to one ounce, provided that the smoker is at least 21 years old.

The new law, which was enacted in 2016, presents Boston Police with a unique dilemma. They've refused to endorse the Freedom Rally; however, not a single arrest was made on Saturday at the event and minimal police presence was reported.

Although authorities aren't stifling the fun of cannabis enthusiasts, they say they're remaining firm in their treatment of lawbreakers. "It will be a zero-tolerance approach to violations, whether it's smoking, or the sale and distribution of marijuana," said Lt. Detective Michael McCarthy told the Boston Herald. "If that is witnessed, or observed, our undercover officers will act on that. We are not taking this lightly. There will be some changes made down there."

Despite police disapproval of the rally, attendees like Madison Robinson told the Herald they're just having fun. "We like to smoke weed — we figured, it was a cool event," Robinson said.

The Freedom Rally offered attendees a chance to buy smoking accessories and hear live music on two stages.

Freedom Rally festivalgoers reported a minimal police presence on Saturday at the event. ALL PHOTOS BY DEREK KOUYOUNKIAN

10 Sexy Scientologists

Haven't you heard? Scientology is sexy! JK, it's a cult.

The controversial religion has been dogged by rumors of abuse and strange practices, with the documentary "Going Clear" and docu-series "Leah Remini: Scientology and the Aftermath" giving the world a clearer view about what exactly is going on with L. Ron Hubbard's followers. It doesn't look great.

Still, there are tons of people — especially celebrities — that are proud Scientologists, or have at least dabbled in the religion. Here, we're listing the 10 hottest Scientologists — from the confirmed, to the rumored, to the ones who left the church. And no, Tom Cruise is not listed. RACHAEL VAUGHAN CLEMMONS

Elisabeth Moss

The star of "The Handmaid's Tale" recently defended her religion against a commenter on Instagram who compared Scientology to the horrible world of Gilead. She was really nice about it. And she's a hot tamale.

Jeffrey Tambor

The "Transparent" star admitted that he took Scientology classes once, but it's no longer his thing. Also he's an attractive and charming older gentleman.

Laura Prepon

The lady with the very arched eyebrows has said about auditing — Scientology's version of therapy — "I've become more me. The auditing has stripped away all of this charge, false ideas, decisions and mis-emotions that were affecting me." Hot stuff.

John Travolta

Travolta has been described as "Scientology's captive," which is not chill. The church supposedly has damaging information about him that Travolta doesn't exactly want to get out. Also, he was pretty hot way back, in "Grease!"

Lisa Marie Presley

Presley left Scientology in May 2012, and maybe wrote a diss track about the church on her third album, "Storm and Grace." But hey, she looks good.

Will Smith

Smith has been rumored to be a part of the church for like, ever — and you have to admit, it wouldn't be too much of a surprise. Nonetheless, a former Scientology Senior Executive told the Daily Beast that Will Smith is not, nor has ever been a Scientologist. Good for him.

Katie Holmes

You gotta give it to Suri's mom: She managed to escape Scientology and secretly date Jamie Foxx for a number of years. Success on so many levels.

Danny Masterson

Not only is the former "That '70s Show" star and current DJ a Scientologist, but he really loves L. Ron Hubbard! "He's a f—king guy who wrote awesome s—t that I love studying." Hmmmm, stretching it just a bit, we suspect.

Juliette Lewis

Lewis has described Scientology as just like, self-care. "It's a religious philosophy and self-help movement. And you'll never see a truthful word written about it in mainstream media." Whatever, but she's gorgeous and a kick-ass singer to boot.

Leah Remini

Remini has been pretty vocal lately about separating from the church. After winning an Emmy for her series, "Leah Remini: Scientology and the Aftermath," she jokingly forgave her mom for getting them into a cult. Stunning and side-splittingly funny as well.

How Trump affected the end of 'Portlandia'

"The Lego Ninjago Movie" star talks to Metro about the impending conclusion to the sketch show.

GREGORY WAKEMAN
gregory.wakeman@metro.us

Next year, the eighth season of "Portlandia" will bring the Peabody Award-winning sketch show to an end. But while the impending conclusion of the series may be distressing for fans, Fred Armisen admits it's the right time — not just because they wanted to show to go out on a high note, but also because of who is in the White House.

"We decided [to end it] because we care about 'Portlandia,' and we care about the quality of it," Armisen explained over the phone. And rather than having the series get stale, Armisen and co-creator Carrie Brownstein decided to end it altogether.

Fred Armisen insists it is the right time to bring the sketch show to an end. IFC

"We also wanted to have a sense of bookends: the beginning of the sketch show and the end of it," he continued. "We care too much about it to do it for whatever reason."

When the topic of Donald Trump came up, Armisen admitted that 45's ascension to the White House affected the writing in the coming season.

"It was really tricky, because every season has only happened under the Obama administration," Armisen explained. He admits, too, that Trump's victory has changed the way he looks at some of the characters. "There are things that we took for granted. We took for granted that a type of character would be annoying or frivolous, and now some of those characters are the ones that I hang on to for dear life."

Still, the "Lego Ninjago Movie" star admits that the coming season of "Portlandia" avoids commenting on Trump directly as a way to preserve the show's shelf-life. "We did a sketch last season called, 'What about men?' Where men were like, 'There's so many specialty groups, so what about us?' That was a look toward whoever these people might be, and that's the closest we came to saying anything direct."

Armisen also revealed that there won't be a big song and dance about the farewell; it will just be focused on being funny. "We try not to make any big final statements with it," Armisen insisted. "We tried to keep it like a sketch show and comedy, just because people watch it out of order. Our main goal is to keep it funny and entertaining and relevant, [so] we stuck to that. It's bittersweet, but it's a normal season."

How to deal with the jerks in your office

Enough is enough.

PATRICK KING
@MetroNewYork
patrick.king@metro.us

Having a bully in your office is like being followed around by a black cloud you can't shake. Every day is filled with the same looming dread that this menace is plotting your professional downfall or out to ruin your day. It's enough to make you want to stay in bed. So what can you do to make your work life more bearable?

According to Bob Sutton, a professor at Stanford University and author of the book "The Asshole Survival Guide," the first step to defending yourself against these jerks is to properly diagnose the threat before picking your battles. We spoke with Sutton to see if he could explain the different types of difficult people you will encounter at work and the best ways to deal with them.

Temporary or certified
First of all, making the distinction between a "temporary" and "certified" asshole is incredibly important before planning your next step. We've all had low moments when we've taken our frustrations out on an innocent bystander. So before taking action you might regret, you should ask yourself: is this person having a bad day, or is he or she really this mean? Sutton believes "under the wrong situation, any of us can turn nasty and disrespectful," so make sure you don't write someone off completely after a one tiny transgression.

Strategic or clueless
Identifying a "strategic" and "clueless" office evildoer is also crucial as one can be much easier to handle than the other. While those conniving office jerks are never great to deal with, the ones who are "so inwardly focused and so narcissistic that they're not even aware of it" are the ones you really have to beware of. Because they act this way without thinking first, there is little chance they will change once you confront them.

Sneaky backstabbers
The sneaky co-workers who will stab you in the back or — as Sutton calls them — "grin-fckers" are some of the most common workplace offenders you will have to deal with. These are the co-workers who will paint on a large smile while gaining intel from you in order to muddy your name and reputation as soon as you leave the room.

The petty tyrant
The last office jerk that Sutton identifies is the "petty tyrant." This could be someone in your finance department or human resources who are in total control of something that you need to be taken care of who goes out of his way to make the process as painful as possible for no reason whatsoever. As Sutton puts it, "There is all sorts of evidence that if you give someone low prestige and some power over you that they will treat you like dirt."

So how can you combat these office bullies as they try to cut you down day in and day out? First and foremost, you should find a different job ASAP. But if you like your job too much to leave, you can always try to distance yourself. Making sure you are sitting within a positive group of co-workers is extremely important. If you are "within 25 feet of a toxic person in the workplace, the chances that you'll become a toxic person will go up substantially and so will the chances of you getting fired for being a toxic person."

So be sure to handle these office jerks the right way before you turn into one yourself.

Pats light up the Big Easy

The Patriots offense got back on track in a big way Sunday in New Orleans.

ERIC WILBUR
@MetroBOS
sports@metro.us

Three things we learned Sunday afternoon in New Orleans as the Patriots moved to 1-1 on the 2017 NFL season.

1 One win, multiple losses

While it was a return to form for Tom Brady and the Patriots offense with their 36-20 win over the New Orleans Saints Sunday (including 362 total yards in the first half, the second-largest total during the Bill Belichick era), it seems that New England paid the price for every score they attained. The Patriots left New Orleans with their first win of the season, but don't be surprised if the midweek injury report resembles something out of a shopping list for household essentials. As it was, Brady headed into the contest with only three wide receivers — Brandin Cooks, Chris Hogan, and Phillip Dorsett — after Danny

Tom Brady put on a clinic Sunday in New Orleans, throwing for 447 yards and three touchdowns. GETTY IMAGES

Amendola was a no-go with a concussion and a knee injury. Hogan went limping off the field during the third quarter, a short time after tight end Rob Gronkowski (116 yards receiving and a touchdown) went to the dreaded sideline tent with what was reported a groin injury. It's the same place Dorsett (knee) visited in the fourth quarter of a game that also saw injuries to running back Rex Burkhead, (scored the team's first touchdown of the day), and cornerback Eric Rowe (groin). Add that to a walking wounded list that also includes linebacker Dont'a Hightower (knee), Julian Edelman (out for the season), and Malcolm Mitchell (knee). If last week's defensive worries against the Chiefs were reason to wonder if Rob Ninkovich might cancel his retirement, maybe this week's injury-filled reaction might be hoping that Belichick hung onto wide receiver Andrew Hawkins' phone number after the former Cleveland Brown announced his own retirement at the beginning of training camp this past summer.

2 To Tom, for the review

If Brady rebounded well with his arm (447 yards, three touchdowns) after a so-so start against Kansas City 11 days ago, he did just as good a job with his football acumen. The same guy who at one time publicly told Baltimore Ravens head coach John Harbaugh that he should "study the rule book," took that suggestion to a deeper level on Sunday, twice conferring with referees to have an offensive interference penalty (pick play was legally at the line of scrimmage) taken away from the Patriots, as well as an overlooked 12 men on the field gaffe committed by the Saints. Just in case you were somehow worried that Brady's head might not be in the game.

3 Everybody loves Romo

Social media was abuzz during the game over former Dallas Cowboys quarterback Tony Romo's ease into the broadcast booth with CBS. In only

What's on tap

The Patriots will now turn their focus to "Patriots Lite" — aka Bill O'Brien and the Houston Texans. The Texans and Pats will play this coming Sunday at Gillette Stadium (1 p.m., CBS). Houston is 1-1 on the season.

After the Texans game, the Pats will see Carolina at home in Week 4 and then the Buccaneers in Tampa Bay on a Thursday night in Week 5. — Matt Burke his second week, Romo was already regarded as a huge upgrade to Jim Nantz's former booth partner, Phil Simms, however low the bar might have been. But just as he did in Week 1, Romo impressed with his insight into the game, at one point comparing the Patriots' offense utilizing a fullback to the 2001 New England offense. His pre-snap reads and formation commentary were fresh not only to the CBS broadcast, but to game coverage in general. Two games in, and he's already in the same stratosphere as Gruden and Collinsworth.

NFL Week 2: Defense rules the day

A look at what went down throughout the league on Sunday:

Buccaneers 29, Bears 7
The Bucs defense picked off Bears QB Mike Glennon twice in the victory.

Panthers 9, Bills 3
Julius Peppers turned back the clock, recording two sacks in an impressive defensive effort turned in by the Panthers.

Ravens 24, Browns 10
Baltimore forced five turnovers in a strong home effort against Cleveland. The Ravens picked off Browns QB DeShone Kizer three times and Baltimore QB Joe Flacco threw a pair of touchdown passes.

The Tampa Bay defense smothered the Bears Sunday. GETTY IMAGES

Cards 16, Colts 13 (OT)
Down 13-3 in the fourth quarter, Carson Palmer hit JJ Nelson for a 45-yard touchdown with 7:38 to go in regulation. The score gave Arizona new life in the sluggish affair.

Chiefs 27, Eagles 20
Running back Kareem Hunt is making a strong early case for NFL Rookie of the Year as he scored a pair of touchdowns Sunday in a Chiefs home win over Philly.

Around the NFL

Raiders 45, Jets 20

Dolphins 19, Chargers 17

Seahawks 12, 49ers 9

Steelers 26, Vikings 9
With Sam Bradford on the sidelines with a knee injury, the Vikings offense — led by Case Keenum — could never get going as they were held to just 146 passing yards. Ben Roethlisberger, on the other hand, had a fine Sunday — completing 23-of-35 for 243 yards, a pair of touchdowns, and zero interceptions. — MATT BURKE

Aries Look for a way to improve your mental and physical health. Get involved in something that will encourage you to build strength.

Taurus Interact with people from different backgrounds. Travel or educational pursuits will open your mind to new things. Discussions will inspire you to be romantic.

Gemini A change at home will reflect how you deal with children or handle your friendships. Aggressive behavior will not and should not be tolerated from young or old alike.

Cancer You can make positive alterations at home without going into debt. Look at what you have to work with and make your surroundings comfortable.

Leo Do whatever it takes to improve your health and appearance. Discipline, fitness and a proper diet will produce a good frame of mind that will help you excel.

Virgo Go where the action is and put your mark on whatever you do. Paying attention to detail and going over and above what's expected of you will pay off.

Libra Reconnect with someone you have worked with in the past to discover an opportunity that will send you in an unexpected but fruitful direction.

Scorpio Put more thought into your work or changes you want to make at home. Let your creative imagination take charge and see what transpires.

Sagittarius Look inward and consider what you can do to enhance your looks, attitude or lifestyle. Personal changes should be made for your benefit, not to please a certain critic.

Capricorn Smart choices will be made if you are conservative when handling financial matters. Excessive behavior will have an impact on your physical and emotional health.

Aquarius Thrive on change. Do your best to size up whatever situation you face, and make a focused effort to improve matters. Romance is on the rise.

Pisces Relationships will change if you open up about your feelings and plans. Dealing with a make-or-break situation will lead to less stress. EUGENIA LAST
